DUTY OF MITIGATE DAMAGED FREIGHT

When merchandise is damaged by Carrier in transit, the owner of the goods should take all necessary steps to minimize any claim for damage. When goods can be repaired at a reasonable cost or retained with an allowance, the owner of the goods should do so prior to filing a claim with Carrier for the damage, if any.

In the event of refusal by consignee or owner of a shipment where some portion of the merchandise still has value, Carrier will handle the shipment as provided either on the Bill of Lading contract or applicable tariff or Transportation Contract and applicable laws, in a manner which will best preserve the interests of all parties. When the consignee refused to accept a damaged item which can be repaired or mitigated at a reasonable cost and in the event Carrier is compelled to sell the item at auction or salvage. Carrier's legal liability, if any, is for the amount realized from such sale, less Carrier's expenses.

It is decidedly to the advantage of the owner of the goods to either repair damaged merchandise, at a reasonable cost, and file a claim for the cost of the repair, or to sell the merchandise "as is" at the highest price obtainable, and to file a claim for loss suffered, if any.
